

In order to remove the heat of a given product, it is necessary to use a cooling system. That system uses energy in that procedure.

To reduce the spending of energy, it is very important that the refrigerated space has insulation in good conditions and adapted to its application type. If we don't respect this rules, two situations will surely occur: waste of energy and accelerated weariness of the refrigeration system components.